

The Value of an Annuity

During these uncertain times there are products available that can help mitigate the risks of investing. With a variable annuity and the protection of the optional riders, you can take advantage of market gains and continue to grow your retirement income – even if the market declines. It might make sense for you to allocate a portion of your retirement assets to a variable annuity contract to generate a predictable lifetime income stream and still have the ability to capture all the upside of the market.

The Risks

1. Longevity risk

– the risk of living longer than expected and running out of money.

How a variable annuity can help:

Variable annuities are one of the few investments that offer income for life, no matter how long that is.

2. Market risk

– a decline in the market when withdrawing money (like in retirement) can deplete your nest egg at an accelerated rate.

How a variable annuity can help:

Variable annuities offer a variety of optional benefits that can help ensure immediate or future income and provide for your beneficiaries, regardless of market conditions.

3. Inflation risk

– as inflation increases, your purchasing power decreases. In other words, you'll need more money to buy things in the future.

How a variable annuity can help:

Investing in equities is one way to help keep pace with inflation. Variable annuities offer the opportunity to allocate purchase payments among a variety of investment options.

Information presented is general information that does not take into account your individual circumstances, financial situation, or needs, nor does it present a personalized recommendation to you. Annuities described may not be suitable for you. Although information has been obtained from and is based upon sources KCM believes to be reliable, we do not guarantee its accuracy and the information may be incomplete or condensed. All opinions and estimates constitute KCM's judgment as of the date of the report and are subject to change without notice. This report is for informational purposes only and is not intended as an offer or solicitation for the purchase or sale of a security. Past performance is no indication of future results.